

baseLocal

How a million neighbors get their morning email.

We write, test, and scale performance campaigns inside a morning email a million readers trust.

A curated morning email, written city by city.

BaseLocal reads the city so the reader doesn't have to: events, news, local spots, things worth knowing. Each location gets its own edition, its own audience, its own morning routine.

Recommendations run inside that editorial voice, written by us and sized to whatever the story needs. The editions are local; the campaigns aren't. One placement runs network-wide, in every city's email, the same morning.

FIFTEEN SENDS A WEEK
MON	Best events this week
TUE	Free events this week
WED	Family friendly
THU	Adults only
FRI	Weekend preview
SAT	Weekend events
SUN	Best-of recap
+ DAILY	Evening edition
+ TUE	Top 10 weekly recap

73%

of readers are women

Most are 50 and over, in mid-size and large U.S. cities: settled, established, and hard to reach anywhere else online.

They have time and money

Established households past the budget-stretched years. They buy what they decide to buy.

They read, not skim

A morning-coffee habit, not an infinite scroll. The email gets minutes, not seconds.

They act on recommendations

This generation still trusts a good recommender, and punishes a bad one. We've kept the first job.

49%

Average open rate, network-wide

Measured across every edition in every city.

Readers trust the recommendations because we never spend that trust cheaply.

Our writing guide bans hype outright: superlatives only when they're literally, defensibly true. Every paid item carries a disclosure asterisk. One over-hyped recommendation undoes months of credibility, so nothing gets over-hyped.

Restraint is the strategy. When we finally do recommend something, people listen, and click.

WHAT WE NEVER WRITE	WHAT RUNS INSTEAD
✗ "Jaw-dropping deal!"	✓ "The cheapest option on this list"
✗ "This hidden gem will blow your mind"	✓ "Ask me how I know 🙄"
✗ "You won't believe what's nearby"	✓ "$10k to a credit card — a true story"
✗ "A total game-changer"	✓ "One we like, and here's why"

The left column is banned in our style guide. Literally.

Source: BaseLocal general writing guide, 2026.

Editorial carries the email. Placements ride inside it.

Recommendations sit inside the edition's voice, hairline-divided from the news and events around them: same type, same register, an asterisk for disclosure.

We Got Your Back is where every new partnership starts its pilot. The Lead Feature and the two Inline Features are the positions winners graduate into.

Lead feature	The edition's lead module, right after the masthead: one placement, the morning's marquee.	SCALE
In the news	Two first-person editorial items after the day's three news stories.	SCALE
Highlights	Two one-liners with a linked phrase, after the organic bullets.	SCALE
Inline features	Two dedicated modules mid-edition: one in the front half, one in the back.	SCALE
We got your back	The dedicated recommendations section, five items daily. Where every pilot starts.	PILOT
Top 10 weekly	Ranked positions in Tuesday's most-clicked recap, the week's single best-opened send.	SCALE

The pilot risks one slot for one week. The decision is made on evidence, together.

FIG. 10 — THE SPOT PILOT, SCORED

FIVE ANGLES · ONE SLOT · REAL NUMBERS

The 9x spread between the best and weakest angle is why we never run one version of anything.

Some offers need more than a few sentences.

For those, the placement drives to a BaseLocal bridge page: an editorial explainer in our voice that does the persuading before the reader ever sees a partner's site. The reader arrives curious; they leave pre-sold.

AS IT RAN — WE GOT YOUR BACK

Strangers can buy your personal data for $0.50: Data brokers sell your name, home address, phone number... These three are our favorites →

STEP 1 · THE PLACEMENT

The curiosity hook

A short item in the edition: the alarming mechanism, not a product pitch.

STEP 2 · THE BRIDGE PAGE

The explainer, in our voice

How data brokers work, what removal services do, and the three we'd pick, with reasons.

STEP 3 · THE PARTNER

The reader arrives pre-sold

Your page closes a visitor who already understands the problem and trusts the pick.

Some placements read like advice.

For a skeptical audience and a considered purchase, we write the placement as a tip from a knowledgeable friend: education first, offer second. Fewer readers click, but the ones who do arrive primed and convert.

AS IT RAN — WE GOT YOUR BACK

Insurance covers disasters, not a $12k HVAC bill: A tree crashes through your roof, insurance writes the check. Your AC dies in the middle of summer, insurance says "that's maintenance."... See how they work (and which ones are worth it) →

THE ANGLE

A factual contrast, not a pitch

Two scenarios the reader already knows: the one insurance pays for, and the one it never will.

THE REGISTER

"In case you didn't know..."

The copy explains how home warranties work before it links anywhere. Advice that happens to have a next step.

THE TRADE

Fewer clicks, better clicks

Readers who click already know what they're shopping for. Conversion quality over raw volume, by design.

Retail works when the offer is real.

A free bottle of gummies with any purchase is generous enough to lead with, so the copy never has to stretch. We positioned it against melatonin, the default our readers know, and backed it with a verified review from a woman sleeping through menopause.

AS IT RAN — WE GOT YOUR BACK

Sleep gummies are free this week: Not the groggy melatonin kind, though. TribeTokes built theirs around CBN and CBD... This women-owned brand has 4.82 stars from 6,000+ verified reviews...

THE OFFER

Genuinely worth recommending

A free bottle with any purchase. When the deal is this good, honest copy is the whole job.

THE MATCH

Proof picked for this audience

A women-owned brand and a menopause-sleep review, in front of a readership that's 73% women, most 50+.

THE OUTCOME

A hit, twice

1,200+ unique clicks in a single morning, strong enough that a second campaign followed.

The best offers solve a problem the reader went to bed with.

Our readers don't need snoring explained — plenty of them sleep next to it. The copy skips the setup, names everything they've already tried, and offers the simplest fix they've ever heard of.

AS IT RAN — WE GOT YOUR BACK

Two sprays before bed, no more snoring? It really is that simple. No mouthpiece to wrestle with, no CPAP mask, no nose strips that peel off at 2am...

THE PROBLEM

Nightly, unsolved, familiar

Everyone knows this one. The copy spends zero words proving it exists.

THE ANGLE

Simpler than everything they've tried

Mouthpiece, CPAP, nose strips: tried them all. Thirty years on the market does the safety work.

THE RUN

Thirty-three mornings, no fatigue

17,000+ unique clicks across six weeks, still running at our last count.

Start with a pilot. Decide with evidence.

Most newsletter advertising is built on one-off sends. We're built the other way: the pilot exists to find offers worth running for the long haul.

Deal structures are flexible: flat sponsorships, performance, hybrids. We'd rather fit the structure to the offer than quote a rate card, and the pilot tells both sides whether to scale.

We write the copy, run the variations, and share what we measure. You bring an offer worth recommending.

THE GOAL	Partners, not one-off advertisers
FIRST STEP	A pilot: one slot, one week
CREATIVE	Written by BaseLocal, approved by you
STRUCTURES	Flat, performance, or hybrid
REPORTING	Shared numbers, both directions

If the pilot works, your offer becomes something we genuinely recommend.